Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: .copper ore, inferior both in product and quality, was formerly worked at A vauza, in the same region. Interrupted and resumed again with little profit, the exploitation was finally abandoned in 1865. MARBLE. These are the only products of the mining industry of the region deserving of serious interest, and nature furnishes them with a profusion that avails little for an article so cumbersome to transport and so rarely demanded abroad. The precipitous flanks of the Valley of the Adize, from near Verona to the Austrian frontier and far beyond, furnish marbles of a beauty and variety of tint, from black and deep red to pale yellow, gray, and white, not found in any other locality. Of course all are not equally fine in quality, and some are inferior to similar types found elsewhere. The black, for instance, can not compare with the well-known Port Venere, nor the gray and white with those of Carrara, but the best qualities of red and yellow are without a rival, and much of the richness of color effect in the monuments of Venice is due to their employment. The best known abroad is the celebrated Scagliola or Saglia, though here it is only esteemed as one of many beautiful varieties. These marbles are all quarried along the line of the Brenner railway and can be delivered in Venice in blocks of 5 by 4 by 4 feet at from $3.50 to $9 the cubic meter, or quarried to...
